Detective Uses Laundry Marks to Identify Crooks

In Eight Years He Has Built Up a Bureau Containing File of 300 Cases.

NEW YORK. — Adam Yulch, whose system of identifying criminals by laundry marks, had a perfect batting average in 1944, doesn't look like a man you'd expect to find mixed up in crime, says an Associated Press writer.

He can identify most murder or burglary suspects in the time it takes to recommend the final laundry mark filing bureau eight years ago, no defense attorney ever has challenged his evidence in cross-examination. A lieutenant on the Nassau county police force, he likes to call himself "consultant for the entire nation's law enforcement agencies" — a title that includes the FBI.

Adam, who is 60, joined the police force of Nassau county 39 years ago. It was in 1925, while he was on the detective division, that he became aware of the potentialities of laundry marks. Three bandits in a stolen car had made a haul of $10,000, abandoned the car and escaped. In the car was a suit of clothes with the owner's name inside.

"Then," says Adam, "yours truly was called in and given the suit of clothes with: 'Find the man who cleaned this suit. I don't care how long it takes or how expensive it is, but don't come back until you've found him.'"

Searched for Three Months.

For three months Adam canvassed cleaning establishments in metropolitan area. New York City alone has 11,000, Says Adam, "I don't know how many pairs of shoes I wore out." Then one day up in Westchester, "to my surprise and I almost gone a backflip, a cleaner says 'yes, that's my mark.'"

All three bandits were caught and convicted.

Criminals had been detected by laundry marks since 1833, but detection was haphazard and tedious because not even the FBI had a laundry mark file. Adam proposed to start one.

He told his commanding officer, Inspector Henry H. King, what he had learned. Every cleaner's mark based on a combination of numbers, letters, or both, and numbers and letters in them. Adam thought he could find the proper cleaner. From the route and customer's marks, the cleaner could tell the name of the person in question.

"Many cleaners use the same indicator but, with the selection narrowed by locality, Adam maintained he could pick the right cleaner "because no two marks are alike." Some cleaners use indelible pencil, some ink, some print, some write, some use a stamping machine.

"Inspector King gave me the green light," says Adam, and he started out. Within a few months his first murder case turned up. The body of a man who had been chained to a tree, his clothing saturated with gasoline and set afire, was found on New Jersey's Palisades along the Hudson river.

Call in Yulch.

No one could identify the victim. Yulch was called in. He carefully sifted charred cloth. With a magnifying glass he found the smudge of a cleaner's mark. Since most cleaner's ink is indelible, Adam took a chance on moistening it. The number came through.

Within two hours he was in a tailor shop in the Bronx. The tailor got out his books, turned to the proper page, then became hysterical. The mark was that of his father-in-law. A dentist's examination clinched the identification.

West coast states and the FBI began to consult Adam. He identified amnesia victims, he caught OPA violators, he identified a drowned man whose body had been in the water four years.

He caught a counterfeiter who had deemed himself safe for two years. The man had left his kit of tools and a pair of trousers in an automatic locker at a train station. If not taken out in 24 hours, the parcels are stored by the station for two years, then opened. Thirty minutes after he received the trousers, Adam identified their owner. Three hours later the man was under arrest.

Adam added institutional laundry marks to his files. His samples approached the 300,000 mark.

Risks His Life to Save Kids From Falling Plane

SIGNAL HILL, CALIF. — Lt. Herman A. Albertini, 21, of Stanton, Ill., combat flier returned from Europe, recently was credited with risking his life to avoid hitting children in the path of his disabled Thunderbolt fighter plane.

The plane, its engine smoking, cut a telephone pole in two, sheared through telephone and power lines and ripped off the roof of a warehouse before crashlanding.

Police said the plane was barely 100 feet high when onlookers saw the pilot leaning out, waving frantically at children to get out of his way.

The plane burst into flames and was destroyed, but Albertini walked away with only bruises and scratches. He is serving with the 6th Ferrying group of the air transport [illegible] Calif.

Why the Dancing Bear Clawed His Pal, the Keeper

Weird Tale Emanates From Underground; Puts on Act to Fool Nazis.

AMSTERDAM—The true story of why the famous dancing bear at the Rotterdam zoo suddenly turned on his keeper, threw him to the ground and clawed and bit him has just been told. One of the weirdest tales yet to emanate from the underground.

The director of the Rotterdam zoo was Erie Klant who took the name of Hagenbeck when his mother, after the death of his father, married into the famous circus family.

Because he had lived in Germany since childhood the Nazis in 1940 ordered Klant into the German army.

Twice he was saved by city officials who said his services were essential. But they warned him that if the Germans asked a third time they would probably have to release him.

Klant had a daring idea.

He arranged a special matinee at the zoo. Everything went smoothly until the famous act of the dancing bear. Klant had worked with the bear for years. It was his favorite performing animal.

Something Happened.

But this time something happened. The tame, usually affectionate bear turned on Klant. It threw him to the ground, clawed him fiercely and bit him on the foot.

"It was the most difficult act I ever performed," Klant said. "The bear did not want to bite me. I had to make him. I also had to make him stop at the right moment. That could have been difficult but my bear was well-trained. An actor could not have done better."

On his way to the hospital Klant deliberately dug into his wounds with an indelible pencil. The lacerations became infected and for months he remained in the hospital. Finally the Germans sent him to a military hospital in Amsterdam.

He managed to stay there for several months more by another ruse.

Butts Against Wall.

He wrapped his head in a towel and beat it against a wall until he lapsed into unconsciousness. The Germans were unable to figure out the strange high fever and apparent concussion.

Finally, he escaped from the hospital. For eight months he hid with his wife Mia in the attic of a house. Because it would have been dangerous if the neighbors had heard a man's voice he spoke only in whispers. When he finally got out, his voice was almost too hoarse to be understood.

Now he is going back into animal training—but as Erie Klant, rather than Erie Hagenbeck.

Woman's Call Gets State Police in Another State

COLUMBUS, N. J. — Mrs. Alfred Heck, a farmer's wife, said she had quite a time getting state police at Columbus to report a heifer missing from her farm in nearby Springfield township.

Trooper Joseph Lyons said Mrs Heck told him she asked the operator to get her state police at Columbus. She got a sergeant who asked her where she lived. Mrs. Heck told him at Chambers corner and Hancock road on route 29.

"I've been in Columbus a long time and I never heard of those streets," the sergeant said. "What police do you want, anyhow?"

"State police at Columbus," she told him.

"Lady," the sergeant asked, "where are you calling from?"

"Springfield township, New Jersey," Mrs. Heck answered.

"This is state police at Columbus, Ohio," he said.

Boy Hung by Toes, Tied Naked, Brutally Beaten

DUNDEE, SCOTLAND. — Twelve-year-old Norman Wilson testified in High court that his foster parents hung his 10-year-old brother, Harry, by his toes from a clothes wringer, pulled his lips with pliers, tied him naked to a chair and beat him, and locked him in a dark cupboard.

The foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Walton, are charged with cruelty to the two boys, who were put in their care last year by the Fife county council. Both deny the charge.

Norman said that on one occasion both boys were beaten "for saying the same prayer over and over again."

"We only knew one prayer," he told the court.

Aluminum Paint to Improve Old Farms

Delay Deterioration By Proper Painting

One of the most common telltale signs of deterioration on the farm is blistered and peeling paint. Such paint should be removed as quickest and most practical of "repair" materials and the best way of stopping deterioration.

The average farmer does not repaint his service buildings oftener than every 10 years. Cheap white paints will not last that long.

Aluminum paint is recommended for agricultural uses because it can be applied satisfactorily to almost any kind of painted surface. It preserves equally well on steel, wood, brick, concrete, plaster, wallboard, galvanized iron, asphalt roofing and even canvas.

Aluminum paint is an effective temperature reducer. A coat on the roof of an uninsulated building will reduce the interior temperature of that building by as much as 10 to 14 degrees. The reduction is effective in a chicken coop, hog house, dairy barn, milk or egg building or the home. Because aluminum paint reflects approximately 70 per cent of the heat striking it, roof temperature as high as 140 degrees can be reduced to 95 or 100 degrees.

Because of its high moisture-proofing powers and its ability to withstand washing as well as constant exposure to steam, fume and other corrosive agencies, aluminum paint has long been widely applied in dairies and similar plants. It is also used to protect all kinds of farm equipment and machinery.

When using a brace and bit to bore a hole in wood that is overhead, and prevent the borings from falling into the eyes, a funnel may be utilized. The bit extends through the funnel, giving it freedom, but holds the cup in place.

Saves Apples by Air

By applying the principle of the gas mask to protect apples in storage, apple growers may save thousands of dollars annually, according to research work conducted at Cornell university.

The conditioning prevents storage apples from developing a "scald" disease, which causes the fruit to become unsightly and to lose market value. One of the greatest problems of apple storage has been the formation of [illegible]

R solutions

The following resolutions of appreciation for Rev. and Mrs. Wm. R. Reed were unanimously adopted by the Fourth Quarterly Conference of Memorial Church which was held recently, with Dr. C. C. Bell, District Supt. presiding.

Whereas Rev. Wm. R. Reed is closing the fourth year of his pastorate here, and will be transferred to another field of labor at the next session of our Annual Conference; and

Whereas he and Mrs. Reed, by their qualifications and high standards of Christian living, have won the love and respect, not only of our own members, but of the community and county at large; and

Whereas this Church, under their ministry, has made marked progress spiritually, educationally and financially;

Therefore Be It Resolved by the fourth Quarterly Conference of Memorial Church, Appomattox, Va. this 5th day of September, 1945:

First: That we express to Bro. Reed our sincere appreciation for the constructive leadership which he has furnished her; for the strong challenging messages which he has brought us during these years, which have quickened our spirits, and given us enlarged vision; for his splendid and effective pastoral work; for the unexcelled work which he has done as teacher of the Young Adult class of our Church School, this class being one of the strongest and most progressive units of the School;

Second: That we express to Mrs. Reed our sincere appreciation for the outstanding work she has done with our Young People, as teacher in the Church School, and friend and counsellor of the Youth Fellowship. Through her efforts, and with the assistance of the teachers in that division, the Young People have become a self-supporting unit of our School;

Third: That we express to each of them our gratitude for the many improvements which they have made in our Parsonage, and for the splendid condition in which they are leaving it.

Fourth: That we express to Bro. Reed our appreciation for the effective work he has done for two years as chairman of the Appomattox County Chapter of the American Red Cross. Through this channel he has won many of the people of the county, in addition to our own congregation;

Fifth: That we regret their departure from our midst, and pray God's richest blessing on them in their new field of labor, as they continue their work in the promotion of His Kingdom; and we sincerely hope that our District Supt. and Bishop will see fit to give them a promotion, where larger fields will await them;

Sixth: That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of this Conference, a copy given to Dr. C. C. Bell, and a copy to Bro. and Mrs. Reed.
